In the Claims:

Please amend claim 1 as follows:

- B1
C1
1. (Amended) A connector for RF coaxial lines comprising two connector halves for establishing contact with the outer conductor of the RF coaxial line by means of an insulation displacement connection with at least one cutting edge arranged on each connector half, the cutting edges being arranged opposite each other in staggered and parallel offset manner in the longitudinal axial direction of the outer conductor and, after penetration of the outer insulation of the RF coaxial line, establish a cold-welding type connection with the outer conductor on the end face and at least one adjacent side face thereof, and the cutting edges, in case of a change in distance of their end faces with respect to each other, slide on the outer conductor without a gap being formed between outer conductor and cutting edges.
